

Guide to Library search tools

What tools are available to search the Queen Mary Library collections?

Library Catalogue

What it searches

- Print collection of books and journals
- Electronic collection of books, journals and databases

How it works

- Searches in the field you have chosen e.g. title or author
- Does not search within the content of resources

What you find

- Journal and book records
- Details of databases

Articles Search

What it searches

- E-journal collection
- Free open access resources
- Electronic databases e.g. MEDLINE and Web of Science

How it works

- Searches for your term as a keyword search in the title and abstract
- Searches within the content of resources

What you find

- Journal articles

Both the Library Catalogue and Articles Search are available from the Library website, www.library.qmul.ac.uk.

THE LIBRARY CATALOGUE

Enter your search term then use the drop down box to select which field to search then click on Search.

Remember the catalogue is only searching in the chosen field; it is NOT searching within the resources.

Using your results

The panel on the left hand side of your results tells you what you have searched.

It also allows you to refine your results, for example to select just the results for a particular Queen Mary Library site.

A further refining method is to search within your results. Use the check box on the right hand side of the search box to do this.

Discovery Options
 Expand beyond library collections

Expand beyond the library's collections to get more results. Note that many of these will not be available full text.

Refine your results using the filters on the left, e.g. language, resource type or creation date.

You can use Advanced Search to combine terms or limit your search by date or language.

Searches can be saved using Save Query at the bottom of the filters. Any saved searches can later be accessed via My Account.
