

EXPERIENCE MATTERS

STAND OUT IN A COMPETITIVE JOB MARKET.

Why it's important

Work experience is essential. It is an important step in becoming work ready and will help you to develop the skills you need to enter the workplace. Employers want evidence of how you have used your skills effectively to convince them of your ability to do the job you are applying for.

As well as helping you make the transition to the world of work, work experience can help you to make informed decisions about your career direction. Use it to explore different job roles and experience various companies or organisations before making a commitment. It can also help you to put the theoretical aspects of what you are studying on your degree programme into practice and gain work experience relevant to the sector you might want to work in when you graduate. Such experience shows dedication and commitment to the career area. Some internships may even lead to a job offer; so finding relevant work experience can have longer term benefits.

Finding opportunities

From job boards, internships within your university, to work experience abroad schemes or volunteering in the community, there are many opportunities and resources to help you find what you are looking for.

Making an application

Think about the skills and experience you might have already gained at university. Did you have a leadership role in a Students' Union club or society? Were you a Student Ambassador? Activities you do because you enjoy them are a great way to develop important transferable skills such as teamwork, communication and time management. What skills and experience have you already gained that can be transferred to the work experience position you are applying for?

Things to think about

- Why do I want to work for this company or organisation?
- What value can I offer?
- What are they looking for and how do my skills and experience match the role?

'My internship experience with Lloyds Banking Group was full of new lessons about the working life. Interning in the marketing department gave me a whole new perspective on the banking industry. I learned the importance of communication skills and teamwork. Everyone I met helped me grow, both as an employee and as a person. Now I feel more confident to step into the unknown and explore new opportunities.'
